What You May Recover

Regardless of whether you file a claim with your insurance company, or you have no insurance coverage, you may have a potential claim for damages. Recoverable losses may include, but are not limited to, damage to homes, damage to personal property, loss of use of your home or property, evacuation related damages, lost business income, loss of cherished possessions, tree and landscaping damages, erosion damages, physical injury and wrongful death.

Our attorneys have experience ranging from successfully recovering millions of dollars against PG&E for allegedly failing to maintain electrical equipment and thereby causing a catastrophic fire, to trying a class action lawsuit in order to force the largest insurance companies to pay their insureds everything they are owed under their homeowner's policies after a fire loss. While no one can give you back your life the way it was on November 8, Cutter Law has the experience and resources you need to help you get your life back on track.
